revolver behind me with the other hand, and talking so soothingly as I could, I began to approach the tree. The moment I moved forward the imp darted into the grove. On numerous occasions I have seen the same glimpses of these strange creatures near our hut, peeping at us from behind trees. The hut and the men were strange sights to them and they were extremely curious concerning our actions. They were so wild, so bashful, if you choose, that they fled the moment they perceived that they were observed. We were anxious to learn something about our visitors, but we were so afraid of them that we could not because we feared that they might be human beings.

A medicine chest and keg of brandy. A small quantity of the brandy was kept in a bottle in the medicine chest. One day one of the men gave Pete a glass of brandy. Pete, who was never served, was taken from the bottle in the medicine chest. From that day on that creature was always chattering about the brandy, and he waited a long time to time, but such a practice only served to whet his appetite for strong drink. Once when nobody was looking, he took the bottle from the chest, seized a bottle, which, unfortunately for him, happened to contain carbolic acid. Before anyone observed him he poured a little of the liquid into a tin and put it to his mouth. Seeing him just as he was about to drink, I shouted and jumped toward him, but before I could reach him he had swallowed the acid. I then took a drink of the contents. We removed his hide and placed his body on an ant hill and it was not long until he was dead. I then took the bottle and most carefully packed the skin and ores, cooked food and resembled men in appearance, had been discovered in central Africa. At the solicitation of the late W. T. Barnum, for whom I had written a paper on the subject, I consented to take part in an expedition which he and others were sending out to capture gorillas, chimpanzees, and, if possible, the missing link.

"We left the Congo river and for days proceeded northward through a dense tropical forest. A person who has never seen tropical vegetation can form no conception of the appearance of an African forest. The difficulties which we encountered in traveling. We were making our way through a country in which a white man had never before set his foot. The trees were so tall and the foliage so dense that with the few rays of light which were in semi-darkness. The ground was always wet and often swampy. Vines and creepers were so interwoven with the trees that in some places we had to cut our way for miles at a stretch. At last we reached a small, open space of rolling, grassy hills. The trees were scattered in small groves.

up, beat his breast with his enormous fists and emitted another terrible roar. He was just beginning to stride toward us when Davis fired. The beast staggered and fell. The other companions fled into the trees amid a shower of bullets. Another shot dispatched our assailant, which proved to be the last of his species ever seen. The stuffed skin is now in a museum in Liverpool.

"Just as the firing ceased we saw five peculiar looking creatures, which appeared to be new species, running from our grove towards another grove. One of the men raised his gun to shoot, but I said, 'Don't shoot. I don't want to kill them.' As I observed, they appeared to be small, long-armed, hunch-backed men. Several days passed before we saw them again. They were now standing a short distance from the hut and saw something that looked like a little black 'imp' peeping from behind a tree. They were just as kind as I was, and an acquaintance was about making drew my revolver. The imp still gazed at me as if I were the greatest curiosity he had ever seen. I held out one and not over ninety pounds in weight. His body was like that of a man in every particular, except that he had a short tall and was covered with fine, brown hair. His face bore an extremely close resemblance to the face of a stout, middle-aged man. He had a small, round nose, a small mouth, and a small chin. He had a small neck and long arms gave him a somewhat hunched appearance. I have seen a great many of these monkeys, and I have seen many can dwarfs, but our captive was none of these.

"As we approached the trap the little creature hid his hands under his face and began to cry. He made no resistance as we tied his hands. When we released his foot from the trap he looked at it and then at us. He refused to eat anything, but finally, when he realized that we meant to treat him kindly he began to partake of every kind of food. As time wore on he became more friendly and began to play with Pete and it was not long until he learned to respond to his name. So far as we could learn, he knew no language, but he was very intelligent in communicating his ideas. If he had any, above that of other monkeys.

"Among the treasures we had pre-

The skeleton in a sack, intending to exhibit them to a scientific men upon my return to civilization.

"We spent several months in that vicinity, looking for Pete's companion, but not one could be found. They were evidently frightened from that part of the country by his capture. We found chimpanzees, gorillas and a few species of humanity, which were not far removed from the missing link, but no trace of the missing link was discovered.

"After a long and fruitless search we returned to the Congo river, down which we proceeded in canvas. The sack containing Pete's skin and bones was in the middle of the main compartment. It was the first care of everybody in loading and unloading the canvas. It was my pillow when I slept, and I carried it in my arms when I went to boat. At last we reached the rapids. A man named Wainright and I were in the boat together when it caught in the rapids. The boat was overturned and was drowned and the sack containing Pete's skeleton and skin, for which we had hoped to realize a fortune, sank.

LONG-DISTANCE WEeping.
Costly Consolation for Foster Sisters
Long Separated.
(Portland Oregonian.)

A very affecting incident occurred in this city a few days ago, which incidentally proved expensive to the man who brought it about.

A number of years ago two little girls in this city were left orphans, and though in no way related, were by chance brought up and kindly cared for by the same person. A strong affection grew up between the two girls, which was warmer from the fact that neither had any parents or brothers or sisters to lavish their affections upon and their lives grew and strengthened as they came to maturity. Finally some turn of the wheel of fortune separated them. One remained in Portland and in due time was happily married. The other went away "up country" and after a while happily married. An intimate correspondence was kept up between the two for a few years, but was finally dropped, owing to changes of location, and years passed without either seeing or hearing from the other. About a time ago one living in Portland heard that the other, with her husband, had taken up her residence in a town only 100 miles or so from this city. A great desire to see her again took possession of her, and she could not eat or sleep on account of it. Circumstances rendering it impracticable that she should go on a journey at the time, her husband suggested that she have a talk with her friend over the long distance telephone.

He rang up the distant city and called for his wife's friend, and after a reasonable time was notified that she was at the 'phone. In an hour or so his wife to talk to her, and the following conversation took place:

"Is that you, Sadie?"

"Yes. Is that you, Susie?"

"Yes."

Then both began crying for joy and kept it up for half an hour or more, without being able to say a word. The unfortunate man who had arranged the interview, seeing that his bill was mounting into the hundreds and bid her to continue to mount indefinitely, called it off for the time and the two friends continued to cry without expense. A meeting between the two has been arranged for, as neither of their husbands is willing to take the chances of financial ruin by allowing them to tackle the long distance telephone again.

One of Many.
(Cleveland Plain Dealer.)

"And you think you have reason to believe that my girl loves you?"

"Certainly. She sent me to you."

"Is that all the proof you have?"

"Yes. Isn't it enough?"

"It's enough for me. Now, climb for the street as fast as your spindly legs will take you. Scat!"

JUST LIKE CARLYLE.

Savage Epistle From the Biographer of Oliver Cromwell.

(New York Post.)

An unpublished and most characteristic letter of Carlyle's has recently appeared in the London Times, and Mr. Cromwell is asked to subscribe toward the raising, at St. Ives, of a statue to the Protector, and his adherence was qualified with no little ferocity for the people who presumed to celebrate at St. Ives the deeds of Cromwell and "King Hudson," the great railroad speculator. The project for the Cromwell monument is a noble one, and it is a pity until the other day for a memorial of its greatest citizen. The dedication, the Times correspondent assures us, passed off with a "glorious success," and was "a mere idle balderdash" which Carlyle deprecated. The biographer of Cromwell writes:

"My private suspicion, I confess, is that the present generation of Englishmen—men who have filled their towns with such a sea of 'public statues' as were never before erected by any people, ugly brazen images do more commonplace advertisement with their own names, and even sometimes to mere paltry scoundrels, worthy of immediate oblivion only, and who are not likely to be remembered by any statue or memorial here by subscribing £25,000 to a memorial for King Hudson—are not likely to do themselves or anything for the great man who has preceded Oliver Cromwell. I fear they have forfeited the right to remember Cromwell in any way, and they are not likely to do any, sad, stern and earnest as the gods, says virtuously to them, 'Forget me and my name, and my name shall be forgotten.' Oh, unhappy cannibal! carry your offering to the gods, and they will be pleased."

emulate him" Nevertheless, I have privately resolved, if such a thing do go down, to be present, and, on every occasion, and to wish privately that I may prosper much better than I can with my present friends. I think it will be very difficult to avoid the same with such an ocean of flummery and mere baldersdash into the affair of the "public" and "private" character of the man, distressing to anyone who feels how a Cromwell ought to be honored by the nation that produced him."

The Girls of Limerick.
(San Francisco Argonaut.)

If asked "Where are the prettiest girls in the world?" I will immediately reply, in Limerick, Ireland. There is a freshness of face, lustrousness of eyes, healthfulness of color and complexion about the Limerick girls that is not to be seen in the sweetestakes trophy. The girls of Cork and of the lakes—in fact, of the country all the way down from Dublin—are somewhat of the Limerick order. In fact, the Limerick girl occupies a medium between the rotund English beauty and the one channel and the rhyph-like Parisian beauties beyond the other.

But, besides the perfection of female beauty—a human ceramic without a blemish. The Limerick girl is also a human ceramic without a blemish. Ingenuously—an extraordinary assimilation, to be sure. In other words, while she is a human ceramic, she has never said words, she seems like one who has never looked frequently into a mirror. She has regular and sometimes very pretty teeth, and if her face is often inclined to rouge-trousse and there is an "Irish expression of mouth," these but add elegance to her

Notice of Trustee's Sale.

WHEREAS, ON THE 8TH DAY OF MARCH, 1901, I, HARRIET HEATH, of the County of Salt Lake, State of Utah, being duly qualified and sworn, did execute and deliver to the Utah Savings & Loan Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, a certain promissory note in writing of that date, thereby promising to pay to the said Utah Savings & Loan Association the sum of $25.00 on the 8th day of March, 1901, with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent per annum until maturity, payable thereafter at 12 per cent per annum, and

and said note provided for the payment of said note, executed and delivered to S. W. TARBET, of Salt Lake City, Utah, as trustee, recorded March 8, 1901, in book "4 D" of the Salt Lake County records, and the records of the county recorder of Salt Lake City, Utah, thereby conveying to said trustee, S. W. TARBET, of Salt Lake City, in the county of Salt Lake, state of Utah, to commencing sixty rods east and twenty rods south of the center of section 5, township 3 south, range 1 west, Salt Lake county, Utah, to the center and one-half mile to the west bank of the Jordan river, thence northeast along said river bank seventy-two rods, thence northwest along said river bank one hundred rods, thence south along the old established line between Nicholas T. Silecock and the heirs of John Silecock, to the beginning; containing twenty-six acres, more or less, and being a part of lots 3 and 4 of the above described section 5, range 1 west.
